

Solving HR's Crisis of the Imagination:

Reinventing HR as Human Resourcefulness

By Nick Nissley, Ed.D.

Crisis of the Imagination in HR

This year's HRIA Conference theme — “Explore the Possibilities” — got me thinking. . .

I've spent my life thinking about organizational life — earning my doctorate in Human Resource Development and serving as a university professor. I've also spent my life doing — practicing HR, OD/OE, and Learning & Development in organizations — serving in roles such as vice-president and CLO, in industries such as mining and manufacturing, health care, and education.

Presently, I am serving as executive director of Leadership Development at the world-renowned Banff Centre, where I am engaged in praxis — seeking to integrate theory and practice — to develop Canada's next generation of creative leaders. My personal experience as an HR leader and my experience engaging with and listening to other HR leaders leads me to suggest we're experiencing a crisis of the imagination in HR.

First, many leaders pay lip service to the value of HR within their organization, speaking with an actor's conviction the lines from the script: “human resources are our most valued asset.” Typically, these words are rushed into print, and included in their vision statements which are wallpapered around the office, before the print from the retreat has even dried. While the leaders are typically well-intentioned, their followers are more skeptical of the hollow prose. In fact, many simply roll their eyes and suggest that the HR leaders' actions speak otherwise.

Second, even when HR is viewed positively by the organization and truly valued as a business partner, too often HR is structurally excluded from asserting its contribution and made impotent. HR may not be afforded a seat at the table, where they could truly partner with and influence the CEO and make a real impact on the organization's culture and performance.

Third, this is often the case because HR leaders believe their role is to be the organization's police officers — enforcing policies. This ineffective HR culture of being rules-bound at the expense of being values-driven is another reason why the organization's leaders may not want to partner with HR, nor see the potential value of HR in solving their problems. Too often HR's response to an organizational client's problem is to recite verse from the policy manual — essentially stating why something can't be done. Instead, the more progressive HR leaders understand that they are solution brokers, that the client doesn't need a yes or no answer — he or she needs a partner to help find a solution. One past company president that I worked for, reminded me when I worked in an HR executive role: "if it's not against, our mission and values ... if it's not unethical or illegal ... then, your job is to help the client find a solution — don't simply recite verse from the HR policy manual."

Maybe it's time for us as HR professionals to venture away from the script, "human resources are our most important asset." Instead, let me suggest that we try on this: human resourcefulness is our most important asset.

Fourth, the daily grind from the sort of issues that HR leaders often have to deal with may breed a cynicism or glass-half-full mindset in those leaders. Too often, these leaders become trapped in a deficits-based view of their workplace, rather than a strengths-based perspective, where the organization and the people are seen through a glass-half-full lens.

For example, consider the most pressing issue facing HR professionals in Alberta at this time: workforce recruitment and retention. Nearly every publication and every HR practitioner is framing this as a problem to be solved — seeking to fix the turnover problem. However, some HR leaders are beginning to examine the problem from another vantage point. They're focusing on retention versus turnover. Consider, if an organization has 25 out of 100 employees who leave the company (turnover), it also has 75 out of 100 employees who are staying (retention). While turnover views the organization's pipeline as half empty, retention views the pipeline as half full. Why do HR leaders focus so much energy on the problems — the 25 employees who left at the expense of the 75 employees who stayed? What if managers began asking the 75 retained employees what makes this a great place to work, versus asking the 25 who chose to leave why this place is so bad?

HR Leaders as Possibilitarians

So, what if HR leaders weren't perceived as speaking hollow platitudes about "human resources are our most valuable asset," and instead served as valued business partners who were seen as solution-focused (and, values-driven versus rule-bound), while exhibiting strengths-based leadership? These HR leaders would be seen as possibilitarians. My personal experience when I meet the most effective HR leaders? They're possibilitarians. They're focused on the process of generating possibilities, thinking of new things and seeing existing things in different ways. These more effective leaders enable creative processes within the workplace, so new possibilities — new processes, new services, and new products — emerge, which support organization effectiveness and success. Yes, these HR leaders are creative. But, in addition, they recognize that creativity in and of itself may not always add value to an organization. These leaders recognize that an innovation process is required to transform ideas into reality — together, creativity and innovation. The process of generating ideas and possibilities, and transforming those ideas into reality are central to effective HR leadership.

Reinventing HR as Human Resourcefulness

So, amidst a crisis of the imagination, where bureaucratic policies trump values-driven sensibilities and problem-focused management dominates strengths-based leadership, how can HR reinvent itself in order to realize its potential as a business partner? In the spirit of exploring the possibilities, let me provocatively suggest the following.

Maybe it's time for us as HR professionals to venture away from the script, "human resources are our most important asset." Instead, let me suggest that we try on this: human resourcefulness is our most important asset. The language of "human resources" suggests an outdated view, where the workforce is simply an asset to be managed. As we know, nothing is further from the truth. Yet, we continue to be constrained by the language and metaphor. Be honest with yourself: do you like being thought of as a human resource, where your value is tied to a financial understanding — as an asset or form of capital within the organization?

Resourcefulness is the human capability of being able to cope with challenging situations, and as we know, our success in our work lives — especially as leaders — is defined by our ability to work through challenges (whether these are seen as problems or opportunities). Further, resourcefulness is defined by our ability to access our imagination and think and act creatively. This creative capacity provides the basis for innovation, which is needed to keep our businesses and organizations competitive in this global economy.

So, in the spirit of exploring the possibilities. . . what if we stopped being consumed with trying to manage the human resources of the workplace, and instead focused our professional talents on developing our organizations' human resourcefulness? I hope this question provokes HR professionals and organization leaders to enter this conversation, and explore what is possible. ■

Nick Nissley is executive director of Leadership Development at world-renowned Banff Centre, located in Banff National Park, amidst the picturesque and breathtaking Rocky Mountains. Nickissley@banffcentre.ca

2006-2007 BOARD OF DIRECTORS

David Knudson, CHRP President	(403) 268-2126
Christine Chater, CHRP Past President	(780) 420-6083
Melanie Peacock, CHRP Treasurer	(403) 440-5062
Allan McCaldar, CHRP Secretary	(780) 464-8429
Bruce Halliday, CHRP Director, representing HRAC	(403) 220-2154
Terry Hartley, CHRP Director, Special Projects Director, representing HRMAL	(403) 329-7395
Heather Majeau, CHRP Director, AB HR Conference - Celebrating Excellence event Director, representing HRMAE	(780) 445-8227
Myles Morris, CHRP Director, AB HR Conference - Marketing and Sponsorship	(780) 427-2726
Kathy Randall, CHRP Director, Member Services	(403) 691-2612
Chuck Smith, CHRP Director, Professional Development Director, representing WBHRMA	(780) 790-6193
Kristy Svoboda, CHRP Director, Public Relations Director, representing CAHRMA	(403) 505-3155
Claudia Verburgh, CHRP Director, AB HR Conference - Speaker Selection	(780) 464-1962

Administrative Office:
230, 1111 - 11 Ave SW, Calgary, AB T2R 0G5

Ona Stanton
Manager - Administration • Email: ostanton@hria.ca

Rodica Zamfir
Administrative Assistant • Email: info@hria.ca

Pat Graw
Financial Accountant • Email: acct@hria.ca

Phone: (403) 209-2420 • Toll Free: 1 (800) 668-6125
Fax: (403) 209-2401 • Toll Free: 1 (866) 443-1956
Office email: info@hria.ca • Website: www.hria.ca

MEMBER ASSOCIATIONS

Central Alberta Human Resources Management Association (CAHRMA)	Human Resources Management Association of Lethbridge (HRMAL)
Human Resources Association of Calgary (HRAC)	Peace Regional Human Resources Management Association (PRHRMA)
Wood Buffalo Human Resources Management Association (WBHRMA)	Human Resources Management Association of Edmonton (HRMAE)

Published by

Naylor (Canada), Inc.
100 Sutherland Avenue
Winnipeg, MB R2W 3C7
Tel.: (204) 947-0222 • Fax: (204) 947-2047
www.naylor.com

Publisher: Robert Phillips

Project Manager: Kim Davies

Editor: Lilliane Fiola

Senior Sales Manager: Steve Urias

Sales Manager: Derek Kuzina

Marketing: Heather Zimmerman

Publication Director: Norma Walchuk

Account Executives: Jenna Boholij, Anook Commandeur, Bert Eastman, Cheryl Ezinicki, Donna Fidelak, Pat Johnston, Wayne Jury, Cheryl Oland, Dawn Stokes

Layout and Design: Naylor (Canada), Inc.

Advertising Art: Sharlene MacCoy

©2007 Naylor (Canada), Inc.
All rights reserved. The contents of this publication may not be reproduced by any means, in whole or in part, without the prior written consent of the publisher.

CANADIAN PUBLICATIONS MAIL AGREEMENT #40064978

PUBLISHED MARCH 2007/HRI-Q0107/5847

Spring 2007

contents

Volume 9, Number 1

association news

- HRIA President's Message 7
By David Knudson
- CCHRA's New Vision and Mission 9
By Diane Wiesenthal
- Celebrating Excellence in HR 11
- Labour Crisis? . . . First, Look Within 37
By Deb Chalmers-Bushe
- Continuing Excellence in Training 40
By Shona Welsh
- The Role of Career Development in Retention of Older Workers 42
By Christine Murphy

features

- The Branding Effect 15
By Michael Palmer
- After Recruiting 19
By Susan Quinn
- Dangerous Liaisons 24
By Sylvia Lee
- Solving HR's Crisis of the Imagination 27
By Nick Nissley
- 12 Key Strategies for 'Bringing Out the Best in People' 29
By Bob 'Idea Man' Hooey
- ROI: Measuring the Contribution of Human Capital 33
By Gail Evans
- First Steps in Pandemic Planning 45
By Roche Herbst
- Policies and Procedures are Not Just for Large Organizations 47
By Jeannette Lannon
- Open Space Learning - Leveraging Web 2.0 48
By Barb Krell

legal article

- Is My Worker an Employee or an Independent Contractor? 51
By N. Nancy Bains

index of advertisers 53

Cover photo: ©iStockphoto.com/Felix Möckel